

Political Poem

This ain't the country where I was born, it's foreign now to me
So said a friend of mine just yester-morn, it is no longer free
I used not to be a worry wort, I thought my home was safest
It ain't no more they took my guns, they said that I'm a racist

I pollute the air most every day, my car it uses gas
Your electric car it runs on coal, but still you get a pass

I'm told my mother was a woman, but now I'm not so sure I never thought to ask her what, she thought her pronouns were It's too bad she died so long ago, but maybe it's a blessing.
I'm sure she'd never understand, the way things are progressing.

And the coal-black dog my mother had, it's name might make you snigger
I'm certain you will probably guess, the dogge's name was schwarz

What I thought was just the weather, is now called climate change cooling wind or warming sun, its never quite in range we're told that we just gotta stop, whatever we are doin or everything we know as living, will fall into such ruin

Inflation is a rampant fact, the meat price is so dear it's putin's fault joe biden says, while pissin in your ear
But I think that I am oh so right, when I say what I've been thinkin It's government that makes it so, the spending sure ain't shrinkin

We left Afghanistan a year ago, together with our standing so biden could show off to us, that he is now commanding the taliban have made it so, that girls can't show their faces their children there are starving too, in all of these sad places

Trump he is they say, in Putin's own back pocket.
So Mar-a-loga is the scene of garlands legal docket Constitution's words be damed, and Donald's rights forsaken A raid's a raid we say, and Malania's clothes were takin

A traitor now you say of him, as always you suspected Me thinks you just screwed up my friend, cause Donald gets elected

Good job, says Joe's old boss, and you've only just begun My goals and plans were not fulfilled, but now they have been won at last at last, declared Barak, not without some great elation we've finally won we've finally won. we're now an Obama nation
