

All Electric America, A Tyrant's Dream

By
David Bareiss

The Climate Change hysteria has launched a frantic effort in the United States to make energy production Carbon Neutral. Sacrifice is to be the main component in achieving the Carbon Neutral state. Mankind must give up meat in diet, gas in cooking, petroleum in ground transportation, and many other offending items and practices.

Climate Change is the latest in the string of hysterical musings that have plagued humanity from the beginning of time, as evidenced in historical writings concerning the sacrifice of virgins to appease the Gods.

The Bible is filled with references to sacrifice as listed in this link: <https://www.openbible.info/topics/sacrifice> Moses and Aaron made a business out of sacrifice, with a portion of meat sacrifice going to Aaron and his sons. <https://www.kingjamesbibleonline.org/Leviticus-Chapter-2/>.

In recent times we have been treated to a number of plagues, real, exaggerated, and completely phony. Before Climate Change, we've been through Global Cooling, Global Warming, Radon Poisoning, Acid Rain, Ozone Holes, Y2K, and Nuclear Waste, to name a few. A complete list may be found in the link: <https://www.epa.gov/history/milestones-epa-and-environmental-history>

Something must be sacrificed in all cases to correct the problem, and in all cases, the proceedings, like the biblical ones, take on a religious demeanor. Scientific arguments are always presented in modern cataclysms from both sides of the debate, but the fervor always takes on the characteristics of a religion.

The financial aspect of movements such as climate change is always a prominent component starting with Aaron taking a cut from Jewish meat sacrifices. There is always a Solendra somewhere in the proceedings, and every politician, from whatever party, uses the movement's issues as a campaign element.

52 out of 195 countries are run by dictators, according to <https://worldpopulationreview.com/country-rankings/dictatorship-countries>.

Dictatorships are a very popular form of employment among the world's most selfish, authoritarian, egocentric ruthless scoundrels. Invariably, dictators' standard of living is enormously more excellent than the hapless citizens who are dictated to. Power over all others is what dictators thrive on. It is more vital to them than the best foods, the most comfortable living conditions, and the freedom to do whatever pleases them in their own land.

What has this to do with an all-electric America, you ask? Unless you are among the very few citizens who live unconnected to the electrical power grid, you receive electric power through a service panel breaker box with a meter that used to be read by the meter man visiting your home each month. The meter man no longer makes his visits since your electrical usage is now reported over the electrical wires themselves.

Individual State Laws determine the rate you pay. In some states, the prices are regulated by elected State officials. In some states, electric rates are determined by free market rules. In some cases, the prices vary by the clock. High usage times are more expensive to encourage a balanced load and reduce the total generation capacity needed to meet the demand.

In a fashion similar to the electric service, other utilities, gas, oil, water, etc., are also delivered to your home, but for this discussion, we will concentrate on the three utilities that have to do with energy, electricity, gas, and fuel oil. And even though some individuals still use coal and wood for energy, let's put that aside momentarily.

The stated goals of the climate change advocates include zero-emission private vehicles, predominately all-electric, and all-electric energy usage in buildings. This means only one energy source will be available to the private citizen for transportation, HVAC, construction, home maintenance, and entertainment, and every activity requiring energy other than that provided by living beings.

This one energy source will come through that service panel meter, and the amount used will be reported automatically. Such a scenario will be too tempting for the dictators among us to ignore.

At present, electric energy in the Contiguous United States is supplied through three networks of power lines, called grids, which connect power generation facilities to the end users. Politicians are already claiming that the grids are archaic, unstable, subject to power outages, and needing improvement. One can only imagine the level of political concern when all energy comes via these shaky transmission grids.

Laws will be passed to make changes, expensive changes. Energy sources, expensive carbon-neutral ones, will be added to address the increased demands caused by the prohibition of carbon usage for transportation, heating, etc. While the transition is in progress, which will be ongoing forever, energy usage will be restricted by reports coming through the abovementioned meters. More so than the Covid restrictions, energy restrictions will last forever. It will be the tyrannical dictators' dream situation, control over every facet of the subjected citizens' lives as separate groups argue and fight for their share of energy.

Click here to email your comments to Dave: Dave@booksbybareiss.com